

Cats are small, carnivorous mammals that are beloved as pets around the world. Known for their agility, independence, and curious nature, cats have been domesticated for thousands of years. They possess sharp claws and keen hunting instincts, making them excellent at catching small prey. Cats communicate using a variety of vocalizations, such as purring, meowing, and hissing. They are also known for their grooming habits, spending hours licking their fur to keep it clean. Despite their independent nature, cats can form strong bonds with humans, often seeking attention, warmth, and affection from their owners.